SCREEN PRINTING (SP)

4-Color Process

Metallic Ink

Our talented artists and experienced press operators ensure that your screen print designs will look their best. In addition to traditional spot-color inks, Vantage offers specialty inks and art distressing to make your logo or design really stand out. We also offer 4-color process inks for white and light colors and can achieve simulated 4-color process looks on dark colors. Our screen print artists will determine the best method of separation based on the artwork, garment color, garment style, and quantity.

SPOT-COLOR

Images are printed with specific Pantone colors. Spot-color art may be solid logos or contain halftones. This technique is effective in printing cartoons, typography, logos and line art. Spot-color printing is the most common technique in our industry. This method of printing works on light garments as well as dark garments when using an underlay and produces a clean, vibrant print due to the opacity of the ink.

FOUR-COLOR PROCESS

Images are printed with four inks (Cyan, Magenta, Yellow and Black) and are generally referred to as CMYK. It is effective when attempting to reproduce photo-realistic images in a garment print. It can also be used for more graphic images that contain a wide variety of colors that exceed the capabilities of the printing machines. If you viewed a printed CMYK image through a magnifier, you would see small halftone dots that make up the colors we see. Spot colors are often used in addition to Four-Color Process to match specific colors or solid copy. This Method of printing works best on white or very light-colored garments due to the translucent properties of the inks. This method of screen printing cannot be printed on dark-colored garments.

SIMULATED-PROCESS COLOR

Images have a photorealistic look but are not printed with the four process colors of CMYK. Instead, simulated process uses spot-color inks, which make this technique great for dark shirts. When printing simulated-process color, the artist creates separations of halftone images for spot colors like red, yellow, blue, etc., using as many colors as the shop's press can handle. Because the inks for simulated-process color are generally all-purpose, semi-transparent plastisol, they produce a bright image, even when printed on a white-ink underbase. This method of printing works on light garments and dark garments when using an underlay and produces a clean, vibrant print due to the opacity of the ink. Matches to Pantone colors are not possible.

Neon

Vantage offers several specialty inks, including clear soft-hand for tonal looks as well as metallic silver, metallic gold and metallic black onyx for more impact. The metallic appearance of metallic silver, metallic gold and metallic black onyx inks may fade with machine washing & drying. For best results, hand-wash and line dry. Additional specialty inks may be available for larger orders.

VINTAGE SOFT-HAND

This popular technique produces prints with a washed-down appearance and vintage quality, especially when combined with distressed artwork. To achieve the lighter hand, a soft-based additive is incorporated to the ink mixture and the design is printed without the use of an underlay. Exact color matching cannot be achieved with this process. Supply your own artwork or utilize one of our pre-designed name-drop graphics that can be easily customized with a company name or logo.
